When Peter and Sharon Georges were working as missionaries in Uganda in 2003, they made a decision that seemed minor at the time, but would have far-reaching consequences. They agreed to pay school fees for two orphans who were living with an elderly grandmother. When they returned to Uganda in 2005, they learned that there were now nine children living with the old woman in a deteriorating mud hut wedged between a main road and a swamp. There were more grandchildren living nearby, some with a single ailing parent, some with other relatives. Within weeks the two became thirteen. It wasn't long before other situations presented themselves: a family of five kids living completely on their own; a little girl abandoned to a neighbor; children living with HIV-positive single parents; and many more.

Half the population of Uganda is under the age of fifteen and there are 2.5 million orphans in a total population of 31 million. When Uganda's bloody civil war drew to a close in 1986 and the country started rebuilding, the AIDS pandemic hit with full force. The result of these two devastating blows, combined with pervasive malaria and poverty, is that a large percentage of the "middle adult" age group has been wiped out. Children are being cared for by grandparents, aunts, uncles, and neighbors, and some are completely on their own. Teens and young adults find themselves without parents—and without the wisdom, guidance, and safety net that parents normally provide.

Education is extremely important in Uganda. Parents, guardians, and children see education as their best way of escaping a lifetime of poverty—scrapping by as subsistence farmers or unskilled laborers, and early marriage for teenage girls. Although primary education is partially subsidized by the Ugandan government, no schooling is completely without cost. The place of education in the Ugandan family's priorities is evident in the fact that hospital admissions regularly drop off during the three times a year when school fees are due. Parents choose to do without medical care in order to keep their children in school. Although fees and expenses are low compared to western standards, they are still beyond the reach of many Ugandans, especially for people who are caring for orphaned children of relatives and friends as well as their own.

As the number of sponsored children increased and Sharon and Peter became more involved with the children's education, they realized that there was more to it than school fees, uniforms, lunches and books. As in the case of the grandmother's orphans, miserable living conditions seriously affect a child's ability to learn as well as jeopardize their general health. In response, their assistance became more extensive: improved living quarters, beds, mattresses, sheets, blankets, mosquito nets, shoes, food staples, and health care. Although the cash outflow was now exceeding their modest missionary stipend, they proceeded in faith. As word of their efforts spread, people of good will began to ask how they could help. Thus was born the St. Nicholas Uganda Children's Fund. The Fund, now in its seventh year, is supporting more than 275 children in school, and provides additional assistance to a number of needy families.

Peter and Sharon retired as missionaries in 2007 and devoted themselves full-time to the work of the Children's Fund.

Mission Statement

To provide for the education, health, and welfare of Ugandan children, teens,
and young adults.

Fundamental Principles & Goals

1. We are driven by the biblical imperative to care for the least among us (Mat. 25:40) and to provide for "widows and orphans in their distress." (James 1:27)
2. Beneficiaries are assisted based on need, regardless of age, gender, tribe, or religion.
3. Primary activities are directed to paying school fees and related expenses, including lunches, school uniforms, learning materials, and health care.
4. Essential related activities are directed to improving living conditions for vulnerable children and their families, including nutrition, medical treatment, clothing, bedding, shelter, clean water, sanitary facilities, and mosquito nets.
5. We maintain complete financial transparency in all our activities.
